Several tests were developed for the determination of the metabolite cis-3-methyltestosterone (M) in urine and soil. The free hormone was prepared by dewaxing a lyophilized sample of 1 g of soil or 500 mg of urine. Water-dispersible powder was precipitated by adding 0.3 M HCl followed by acetone. Free testosterone, in the form of the acetate, was derivatized in the gas chromatograph/mass spectrometer (GC/MS) column to form a trimethylsilylether derivative. The amount of metabolite formed during the ring-opening reaction of the olefinic bond of the 3-ketone with t-butyltrimethylsilyl ether of 3-hydroxy-5 α -androst-1-en-17-one was determined by the GC/MS response ratio of [M + 1] ions of the derivative to that of the M ions. The limit of detection of the assay in 1 g of soil or 50 mg of urine was 1 microgram/kg. The recovery in 1 g of soil was 69% and in urine 76%. The intraassay coefficient of variation (CV) in 1 g of soil was 6.1% and in 50 mg of urine, 4.5%. The assay in 1 g of soil or in 50 mg of urine showed a CV of 6.0-7.0%.Diagnosis of myocardial infarction. The diagnosis of myocardial infarction is based on the presence of a characteristic clinical presentation and the finding of pathognomonic enzymes, myocardial necrosis, or both in the serum or plasma of a patient. ECG changes may also be important in the diagnosis of the patient with clinical chest pain and serum enzyme abnormalities
